

The State Bar of California Committee on Women in the Law

Presents

So You Want to Teach Law?

April 17, 2004

10:00 a.m. – 3:00 p.m.

Loyola Law School, Robinson Courtroom

919 S. Albany Street, Los Angeles

Many lawyers and law students are interested in teaching law, however law school faculties are not always as diverse as might be expected given the number of women and minorities in the profession. This program is offered to de-mystify the process and possibilities, provide a realistic view of the demands and benefits of various faculty positions, and give nuts-and-bolts instruction for those interested in pursuing this career path. Three consecutive panels include:

- What to Expect Teaching at a Law School? Get the scoop on requirements, duties, salary, hours, research and writing expectations and more from tenure track professors, administrators, former deans, adjunct and clinical professors, and legal writing instructors.
- Elimination of Bias & Increasing Diversity [1 hour of approved Elimination of Bias Credit] Learn about current statistics highlighting bias, recent trends, and strategies for eliminating the bias and improving the diversity of women and minority attorney applicants for law school teaching positions.
- How to Get There? Professionals who have served on law school hiring committees and those who have recently been hired will share inside information on successful resume building, real hiring procedures, the value of an LLM, the national hiring conference for tenured positions, alternative paths to tenure track positions and more!
